Spiritual inequality in wealth

It is easy and spiritually unearned to speak from a position of ease. Yet, it is easily the way of the world. if you're going to teach the world how to be rich for instance, you're going to have to fake it till you make it. You're going to have to drive around in borrowed cars, front your borrowed mansion as yours, lean borrowed monies against an abode, spend money you don't necessarily have. You can, after all, never be able to speak authentically while on a wearily long homeless vocation. It becomes easy to see why people are easily misled by prosperity preaching. If God invented a pyramid scheme, it would be prosperity preaching.

The faith in such is not a personalized way of moral living, not a personalized way of life, but rather a personality projection that is altogether a phantom. Jesus, after all, if the stories in the bible is to reach anyone inclined towards spirituality, feels more like a pauper, a homeless pauper without what the prosperity preach, beyond the too many unintellectualizable everything from ease belief—the subsequent effect of an act done without any verifiable causation for the return—stuff, the stuff—things that has to be done for Jesus to be evident as the savior.

This ease of achievement is everywhere commonized as an incentive towards a belief system, any belief system except that which is realistically done without ease.

I realized some while ago that spiritual advancement is hardly made in the collective.

Why are these people being applauded and followed? Because, media, television, radio, social media and such capable of this electronic reach is a degenerately uncaring cult—uncaring that is of and for the audience's mental or overall state but rather for their established interests. This is not necessarily a wrong thing but rather a question of ethics. But this must be noted and stated. They get fed upon as a viral network and they feed the masses in the same viral manner. They opened your minds and lives to the hypnotically degenerative power of ease. Degenerative for you is generative for them. Boredom, our human boredom became a platform for them to thrive.

Your consciousness, your mind, is their crime scene.

These ill realities an established insider cannot tell. Slowly they began to ignite in our minds—the hypnotic attraction of superficialities, affection for dysfunction, affinity for excesses, thirsts for plastic surgeries made hypnotically necessary and such more mentally defecting impositions—through advertisement. The masses became their experimental pigs with their (the audience's) insatiable thirst for more. Dysfunctional people on television used to amaze me. Now I have no affinity for them except for entertainment purposes. They don't amaze me anymore. I merely needed exposure to them and the reasonable analysis of such. These platforms can also be platforms of self discovery, self transition and optimization. I should know. They are extremely abusive in believing in the power they believe they wield. The subjectivity in it is to separate them from the imaginative power they believe they wield. Anything I am exposed to through them is a field of study for me, absolutely never taken at face value.

Writing is my life, my way of living. I breathe it. Dedicated much of my life to it. But I was too racially different, ill equipped, unfit and my pseudonym (which was coined from my dead grandmother's name and mine) was too unfit for me(who with an intelligent mind would have thought my coined name won't in the least make me seem African American which I am not?). When evil wants everything you are, evil will claim it one way or the other(and no doubt about it—there is evil in this world). So I developed the give what you can Paypal method (and evil will go there too as we must investigate it all). I couldn't stop my love so I stopped the money for my love. I could do other things. I started songwriting and singing for the reach, for my writing. I have come so far on music, it's almost unbelievable—the power of self trust and optimization in great affliction.

And now I am going to throw myself into physics(which I have great affinity for), mathematics (its applicative properties, whenever I use it, surprises me everytime), and comedy(developed in the depth of trauma and tragedy). I am a consciously thriving, living human being, and I can tell you so with reasonability, impartiality, rationality, intelligence, wisdom, intuition and more. Every harm, every degenerative curve they threw my way gave me an incentive for these spiritual traits. Yet, I am this worthlessly, hopelessly abandoned homeless human being clinging on, living on the mere human and humane traits of living and being.

Need I ask you who you must put your trust in?

Their love for superficialities are so opposed to my being that I have to be brought back to a reasonable theoretical conception of it, knocked back into the possible reality of it. No wonder I am not mated. That requires grand superficialities nowadays.

Their vanities know no bounds because money is a one way stream from the belief systems— believe only they can cure your boredom and emotional connections and dependencies—cure your endangered carnality for a return to heaven—cure the lack of great prosperity you see them living—give you the perfect plastic look you see them sporting—and more. I must admit I am not speaking for a majority here, the majority are common minded and easy to manipulate from the too easy proposals of ease. I am speaking to a niche group who are spiritually inclined and may choose to live without such grand excesses that belittle the personal wealth and intelligence of a capable human being by equating it to material wealth and expectation. A great inequality. And in my case there is great evil being perpetuated to project this parody.

Nobody here preaches moderation and personal money management. In my case, I equate this spiritually as simple interests and the great expectations of simple returns with great holdings. That's usually nowhere to be found out there. Because the holdings are the "aims" and "hope" and the belief in the currently dying American dream due to dying incentives and excessive expenditure are the return policies. If the rich are not paying their shares with tax exemption claims, what is paying for these expenditures but the ever growing super-packed trillions of debt, the middle and lower class? Here my readers, you must realize more math has to be done on this issue than more engineering. More engineering seems to equate to little to no tax payment. Where is the flow of money streaming? What is keeping this doomed train running towards an uneventful eternity? This has to be a sickness!

And personal money management should be taught in high school. Should be the first class to be taught in college before school loans are awarded so they may not be victims of it by crimes and by abuse. I have more trust in Donald Trump lying about his worth to get a loan he would return in good faith than Joel Osteen preaching to his congregation about the importance of tithing. But I must imagine Joel Osteen donates a lot of money to the Democrats.

These sorts of arguments in the belief that the quality of a voice is not in its natural authenticity but rather in the quality of it, for the material and instituted expectation of it, is for the authority of the fold. The fold—an institution of enabled persons strictly based on the knowledge of, appointment of, associations with, empowered by, secured for, equipped for and more for what's already established. Anyone who threatens the establishment, consequently bringing uneasiness in the group of the fold, faces damnation and ruin.

An establishment of such, a religious propensity for prosperity with an investment that doesn't necessarily guarantee return especially from the same source, an establishment dead set on a set of belief systems on a group dictating their lives tacitly or expressly and their treatment of others unlike them is not merely a problem of potent inequality, it is not an equation of ease. It is a statement of actual ease. It is, again, extremely easy to speak from a position of ease—makes you ponder it ruminatively that the projection of greatness from ease may indeed be mostly a projection, a fraud, a projected fraud. It is a projection of such things as fate on the behalf of a person when such fate, if it should have any merit, should stand on its own.

Why in the name of reasonability do we fall for such. And the answer brings us to a circularity. Because it is easy. It is so easy, the stupidity accompanying the majority of common people can accept it. Ease is a measure of conformity. Greatness is the outlier's inevitability to cover the necessary human distance as thought, experience, expression, experimentation and more. It must be surging from the barest of human existential states. It cannot be made equitable in establishment. There is no back story in a system external to me that isn't in turn a backstory to mine. Life must stand and resonate on its own terms so that it can eventually be read as that relative to life, to that particular life, not that relative to another's life. Evil, real evil in these established ills plaguing humanity, plaguing the capable individual in society is in perpetual comparisons to others to destroy a life, a way of life unwanted within the relatively degenerate fold. This, for a capable distinct individual is no easy feat to conquer. It needs overwhelming accumulation and culmination of spiritual armor for a worthlessly spiritual material fate.
