The Flat Rebellion

There is a flat rebellion to the horizon, a quiet resignation to the vastness and implicit aspects of nature—a balance of infinite possibilities, limits and continuity. There are punishments for the implicit, and favors for the outrageous. For those who claim their riches one way must lack riches otherwise. Nature cannot be cheated. For those who do lay their porous heads in calamities unknown, errors of the past for a future tamed by the unpredictable and predictable aspects of nature—errors of calamity.

Those in science who attribute harm as universality, unity without natural propensity, progress without the reckoning of vectorial differentials, those who succeed the horizon without the formation of dimensionality, without the return of height, of space, of humanity must know eventual dehumanization. Why cheat nature when you can simply get out of it. Be your own maker, own your life and all your artificial creation. Do not steal the life, labor, liberty or humanity of that which you don't know. Their laughter will turn to sorrow in unexpected ways. Why divulge nature with a headless mentality.

Once upon a degenerate time, a non-forest-able will-soon-be extinct polar bear went into the forest of Africa and met three black monkeys and a lion. And depending on where, could meet the black bear or the brown bear. Just how genetically degenerate can a story be? Thus far, they have no humanity. They, the greatest storytellers, accuse the stories of religion of grander stories. Yet their progress and monies are artificial. They have lied with great sickness. They, being the sickness. Such are the degenerately headless mental stories they tell. The rotation of their headless mentality shall never know a new whole. The perpetual abyss of their vacant seats shall reckon no presence. As without wholeness in nature there is no existence but rather illusions calling delusions without humanity. Stupidity will be their faith at the most expected height, calamity their solace.

They are dead. For without a head life cannot function. They are thieves. For where you cannot carry a burden, you cannot carry a purse. Within every aspect of nature, the unexpected shall . plague them as a curse—they who reap where they never sowed. Because they have chosen no realistic presence, they will never be present with well-being. Nature is existentially hardlined, their reflection shall delude them into their graves and beyond it. It is the worst of it that it is all in ignorance. It is the worst of it that life, labor and liberty is stolen for abject ignorance. Money is artificial. Abundance is not for humans. It's for nature. So are seasons This is a universal fact. It will never belong to man. Humans are limited in this scope.

From the carnality they cannot afford, they deduct labor. From the crimes they commit, they gather up what they do not sow, and derive downward what they have no equations for. They have no solemn dictate. Their expression is loud. They seek to steal the solemnly of another's earnest sacrifices. What does nature breed without its recognizance? Or suffering without its solemn gains? What can be stolen and never spiritually avowed?
